Pretty OK forest

This forest doesn't have the flash or flare that some forests do; it's just a simple little forest that grows in your room and makes that pleasant rustling leaves noise. You don't have to worry with feeding the trees every day since they are pretty self sufficient. Overall, I am very pleased with my purchase.

Sublime but small

I received these trees as a Christmas gift, and so far they have been a pleasant diversion.

I chose an ideal place for my little forest, in a hallway, where the sound of the rustling leaves can be heard from two rooms. It is quite sublime.

However, I must say that the trees are much smaller than I expected. Are they supposed to grow any bigger? Sure, they're cute and all, but they are a little small. If you're going to buy these, you should use a measuring tape for a reality check on how big these things actually are.

Impressive forest sound

This forest was just what I was looking for. Nice rustling leaves sound, and the trees don't shed bark or leaves around the house. The only "con" I can think of is that the trees are a slightly darker green than that advertised in the picture.

I like to separate the species by putting the palms in the bathroom, the evergreens in the bedroom, and just about everything else in the living room. It's almost like traveling to a different country just by walking through the door!

Just your average forest

In the catalog, there weren't many forests that actually grow and have expansion packs, so this forest was pretty much my only choice.

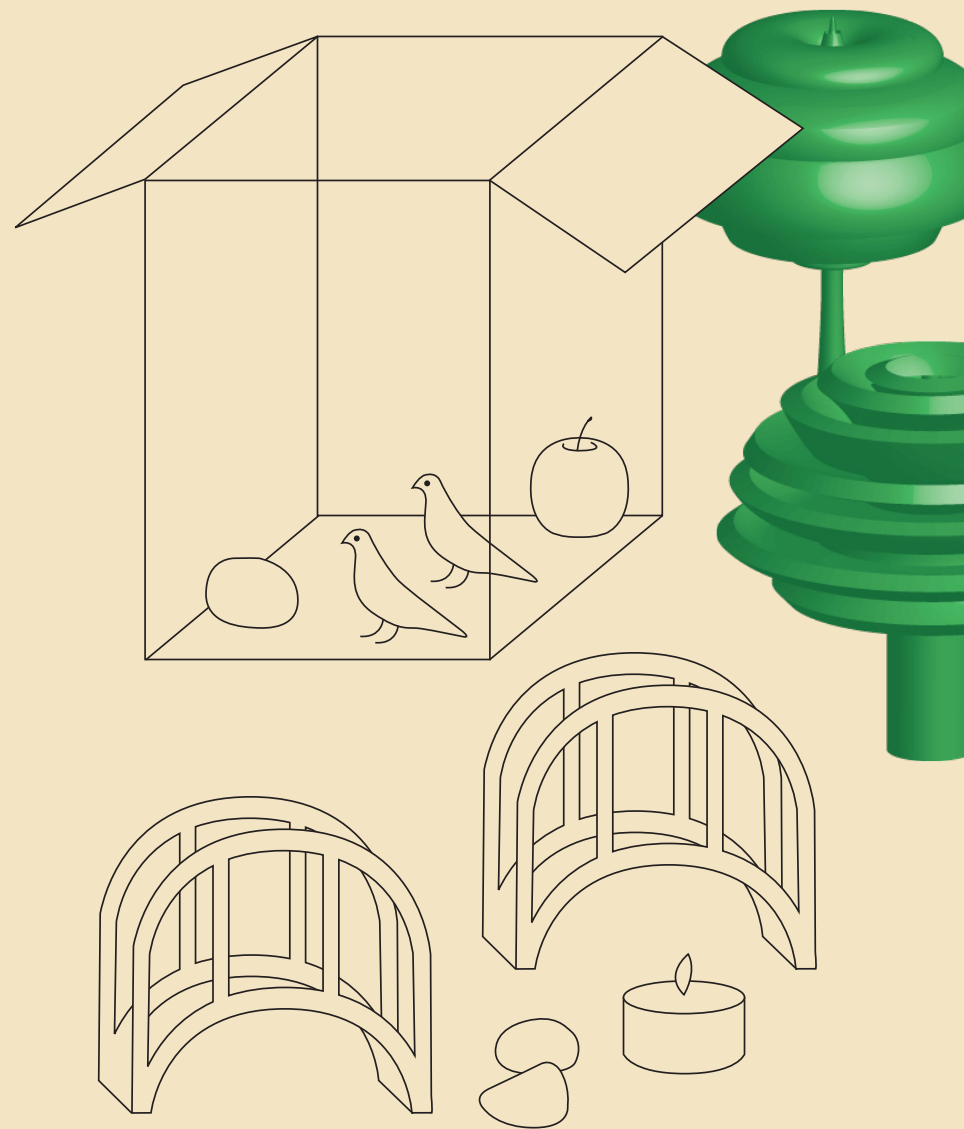

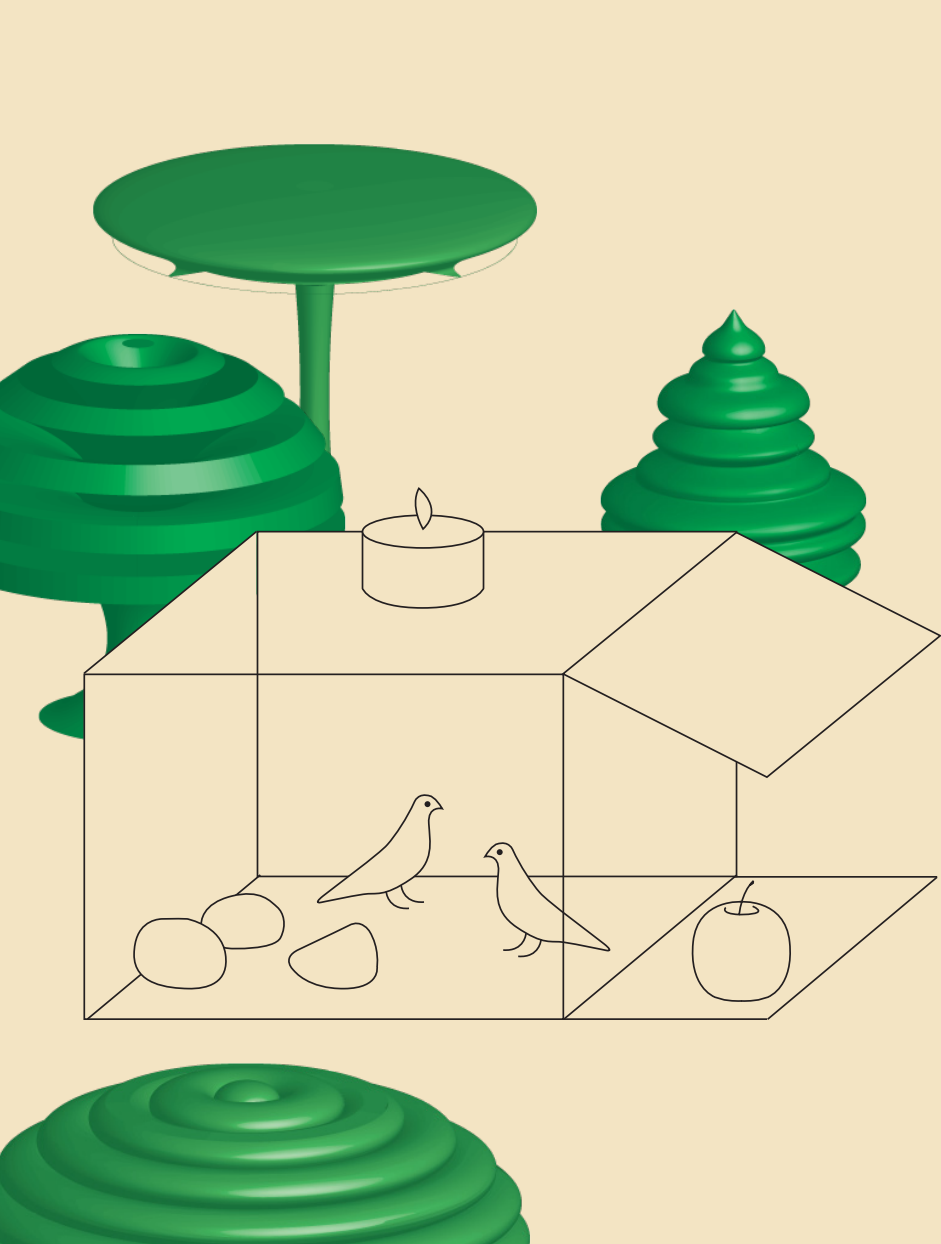

Pros:

- Nice leaf texture, which allows you to put your hand through the leaves and relax, unlike those oily leaves from plastic competitors.
- Solid roots, and lots of them. Some other forests available do not include ample roots.
- (In the expansion pack...) Beautiful rocks, 1 miniature bridge, 2 pigeons, 3 small tumbled stones, and an apple. (I couldn't care less for the tealight candle. Wish they'd included a miniature dog or bell instead.)

Cons:

- Pricey. Costs 2 or 3 more than other forests.
- My rocks from the expansion pack is about 1/3 of the ones in the picture.

As long as you're not expecting a fine piece of art, the pros should outweigh the cons. Enjoy!

Trees grow right into carpet

After arriving at 2:40pm one Friday after a long shipment from god knows where, these trees made their way into my living room. In general plants don't do too well in transit, but since these little guys don't work that way, they withstood my TGIF celebrations and grew right in. I still have video from their first day, growing into the floor, charging up for their life ahead. Never miss a charging spot, I said to them, especially on such soft ground as this — I know soft carpet when I feel it haha!

The next day I had to do some errands at the mall, so they continued to acclimate while I was away. I picked them up some food at the grocery store, and they have been content ever since!

I hid my wifi router inside my little forest to encourage my house guests to get that natural, open window freshness vibe. And my guests keep coming back! Maybe public wifi just really sucks in this city, but I'm willing to bet that my relaxing, natural trees are 100% responsible, thank you very much. FIVE STARS!

Peace spreads like wildfire

These trees are so, so peaceful. They are incredibly important in a town like ours that was bombed some fifty years ago. Working for the city, I ordered the trees to restore that peace. As of yesterday, we've installed them in Peace Park, Peace Fountain, and Peace Statue. We even installed them in the nearby GAP (since we can't trust all city dwellers to seek out Peace, if you know what I mean haha). Specifically we helped GAP with an outdoorsy window display, "Life is shorts". About a week later, another store in the mall known for hardcore wilderness gear ordered and grew their own little trees. Now those hiking boots, khakis, lumberjack or chamois shirts really do make sense ... you never know these days when a little forest will sprout up haha!! How fun to see these peaceful little trees to catch on like wildfire in my very own city.

Dead turns to life

I'm a florist. :) We ordered these trees for our client, a local hotel. We advised the hotel to put the trees in all vacant rooms to give these these "dead" rooms a "life" of their own. So that's what the hotel did. It's been a week. Reports show that guests spend 62% more time inside the hotel than out, and 48% of guests report a "fresh, beautiful smell" that is neither overpowering nor artificial. Maybe this is also why guests spend 30% less time in the neighboring casino (that has no such greenery). I know it's only been a week, but wow, I'm just so happy. Thanks listening and have a great day. :)

Overwatered people

I work at a cafe at the top of a mountain. Hikers are always so tired, thirsty, and frankly a little bored when they finally get here. As you can imagine, pouring water after water gets old ... quick. Coming up the hill, you see pets, ancient stuff, floating love shrine, giant ladle ... way too much stimulation, in my honest opinion.

So, for mild excitement we planted the trees in our cafe. After gulping a few waters, the hikers tend to go wild taking pictures "inside" the little forest, HA HA!

One of the hikers who had one too many waters stepped on an tree and split it in half. Indoor Activity's great customer service sent us a new one right away, and it grew right in and even came with a secret wifi network as a little added bonus.

Dark basement problem solved!

I run a little restaurant in the basement of the shopping center. We've been trying to entice more people down the stairs to eat, but the basement is just plain dark.

So then come in the trees. We think: hey, if we put greenery in here that looks like it gets natural light, maybe we can fool some people into descending the staircase.

We install the trees, but then the management changes. Five times or more, to be honest I really lost track. We went from being a restaurant to a blood donation center to a used car dealership to a convenience store to a love hotel. All I really know is that we're still a love hotel and that we've had these trees basically forever, and our guests just adore them and they say they really bring the outside in. Four stars!

Cheap and somewhat alive

These trees are cute and moderately lifelike. However, when I used my golden scissors to trim their leaves, they turned darker green, almost brown. I hope I didn't hurt them, although perhaps I don't care since I'm not sure if they're even alive. Oh well, what more do you expect for twenty dollars at the drugstore?

TRUE LOVE FOREST

I bought these trees for my fiancée. We met in a real forest — so you can understand the allure of this memento. I browsed other forests online first, but this was the only one that grew quickly and had many expansion packs ... just like our love, of course! Anyway, this forest was the base of our in-house shrine dedicated to true love. Anyone in search of a soulmate can come here, enjoy the fresh smell and rustling leaves sound of the trees, read from our love collection, and (only at night) view our pink neon lights. Of course, it is important to pray too. After you pray, you are allowed to initial your and your potential/desired soulmate's initials into our wooden floor. Anyway visit us online at trueloveforest.tumblr.com and book an appointment at your convenience! — Love, AC & DC

Immortal pet

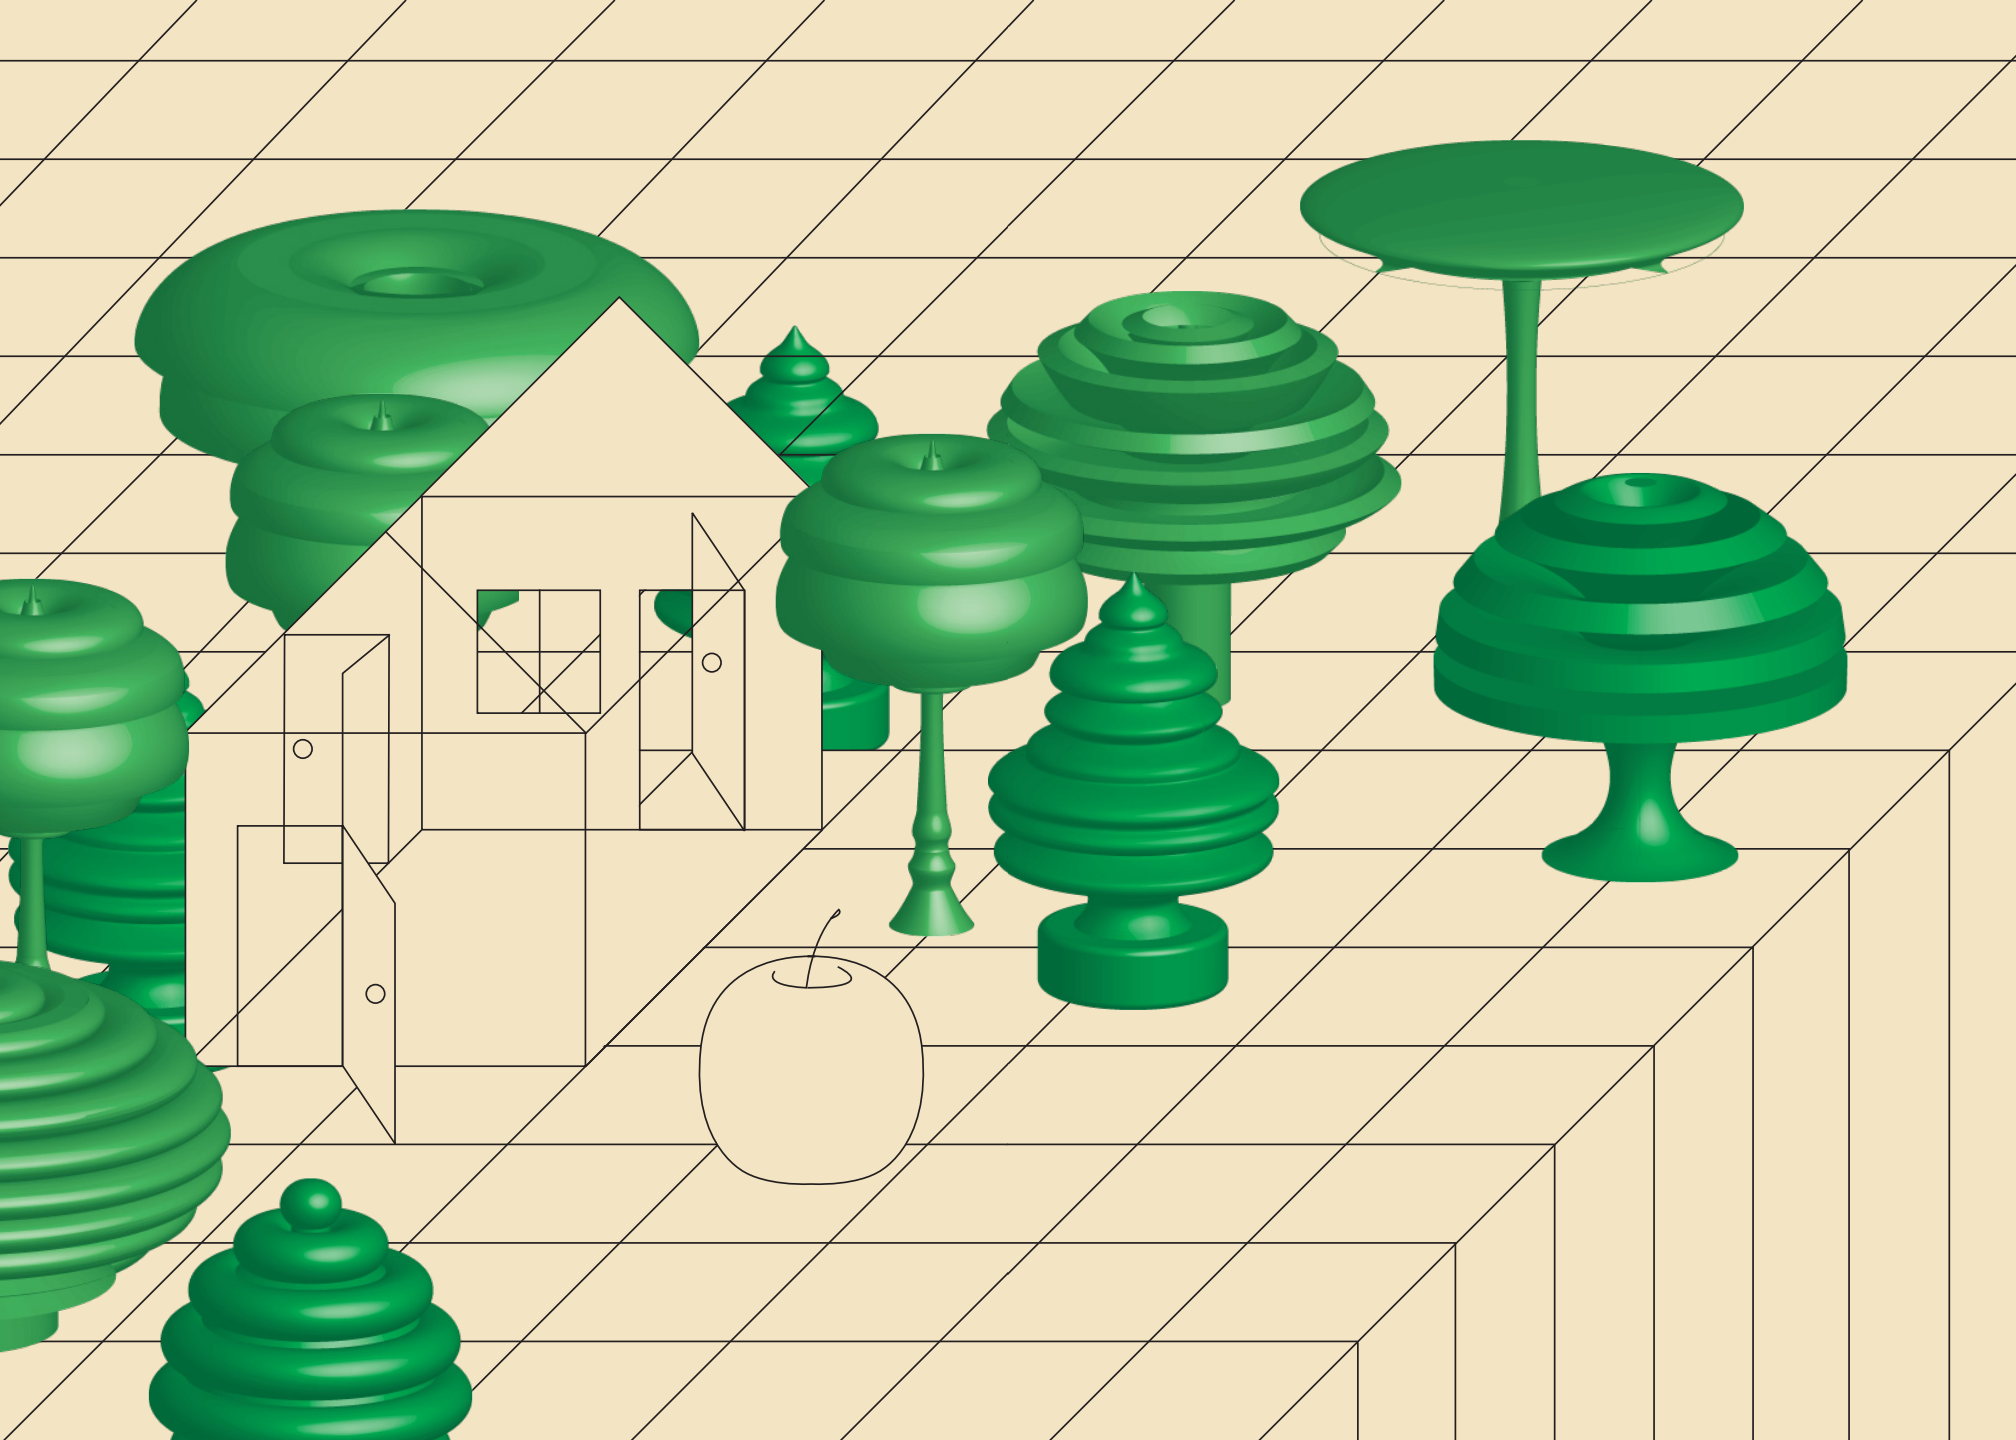

I keep on waking up later and later. People might say it's me getting over jetlag or it's just me getting old and/or fat. I don't care what other people think of course, but I do want to reform for myself. ("U do U" as they say!) I've tried eating a banana before bed, sleeping near a golden clock, filling my room with mist, walking around without talking, etc. etc. I even had a pet that would wake me up every morning, but long story short it died. These "fake" trees don't seem to die yet, and as an added bonus, they are on a very agreeable circadian rhythm! (Their leaves rustle promptly every morning at about 8am.) The only bad thing I can think of is that I don't know if they are immortal yet.

Avoid expansion pack

This is just your average grow-in forest that is quiet, fresh, and a general good background to your other activities. We personally installed it in our “open air spot” of our home for added freshness. After house guests return from this area, they often say they feel like they were “getting born in 2013”. Strange but, I guess that’s a blast of nature for you!

Although the main product was good, I was especially disappointed with the rocks in the expansion pack. They are just like the rocks you find in your driveway. They are not jade rocks as described. Also the pigeon figurines don’t easily stand up on their own. I would really forego the expansion pack if you can help it.
